

NEW YORK FASHION LETTER

New York, Nov. 11.—If you are looking for a costume that will do duty for a number of occasions, order a two-piece princess dress of as good quality velvet as you can afford, but by all means be satisfied with something else unless a tolerably fine grade is procurable. Have the skirt made circular and faced about six inches at the bottom with cloth, wear the costume which it is intended to complete. And suggestive of this is a cavalier tendency, difficult to define, about the readiness at present in fashion. This may possibly be traced to the sparingly trimmed and more visible crowns, together with the tendency of trimming, and if it were not for the pulse of the bandon chiffon, lace and tiny edges of fur flaps, however, there are many coats that are simpler in style and consequently of less cost, and among others must be noted those of carnation, in box style, which are trimmed only with a rich and handsome black braid that is put on about an inch within the edge and stitched down quite flat, just as it would be upon cloth.

Quite a fancy is being developed, just now, for plaid suitings. Some of the most attractive of the new gowns are being made in plaids, and designers have apparently put forth some of their best efforts in making up costumes. From the tiny checks, shadowy in this outline, fashion has now plunged into bolder plaids. These fabrics are the most difficult proposition a dressmaker has to deal with, but when a plaid gown is a success, it is a remarkable one. Illustrating a novel treatment of plaid suitings is a gown made of brown plaid, the light tones of which run into almost pink color. The skirt for this model was extremely wide at the hem, measuring at least eight yards. Set into the circular skirt were panels of pleated broadcloth, a panel for each of the numerous gores of the skirt. These were so arranged that they fell together at the center, visible as the wearer moved. With this skirt was an old bolero jacket made of the plaid, with a slight introduction of the broadcloth.

There is also a passion for velvet just now—indeed, one can scarcely be said to be fashionably dressed until one has added to one's toilet this flimsy thing, which softens the shade of whatever hat may chance to be worn. To be quite correct, the veil must be neither white nor cream, but an indescribable something between the two. The French girls have given us rather a pretty idea in hatpins, the head of it being of artificial flowers, to match those worn in the hat, and the autumn blossoms have been utilized. Jeweled pins must harmonize with the ribbon or velvet of the trimmings.

Short skirts with velvet bodices are to be worn, also lace skirts with silk bodices. This is an economical fashion, and permits of the housewife's maker making use of things she has on hand. But it will also lead to terrible combinations, and we may expect to see some frightful examples of mixed fabrics and swarming colors when the amateur couturiere blossoms forth.

Man's Unselfishness. But Thos. S. Austin, M. of the "Republican," of Leavenworth, Ind., was not unreasonable, when he refused to allow the doctors to operate on his wife, for female trouble. "Instead," he says, "we concluded to try Electric Bitters. My wife was then so sick, she could hardly leave her bed, and five (5) physicians had failed to relieve her. After taking Electric Bitters, she was perfectly cured, and can now perform all her household duties." Guaranteed by all druggists price 50c.

For the daughter of the household, who has reached or almost reached the coveted teens, there is nothing more suitable than the shepherd's plaid. For the school room this makes an attractive frock, while for Sunday best it is also suitable and pretty. When made of heavy tweed it is a comfortable frock for chilly days of early winter, and when set off with a crimson tie, the small woman feels that she is dressty indeed.

A pretty model for a girl of 16 or 12 is a princess made on the lines of the ever popular and becoming Russian blouse. In this dress the blouse extends to the hem of the garment. It is a three pleated costume, a broad one in the center, while a narrower one is on either side, the back of the frock being similar to the front. A black patent leather belt is clasped about the girlish waist, sufficiently loose to fall to the hips, while white button linen collar and cuffs complete the pretty model.

one trembles to think what would be the result, an ugly, bedraggled effect being almost inevitable.

The blouse coats also are eminently chic and eminently elegant, but quite different in style and effect. They are uniformly extended below the waist line, and finished with smoothly fitted skirts at that point, but very extensively as to the cut of the front and the trimmings.

Fancy sleeves make a feature, and one of the blouse coats referred to is made with those of three-quarter length, which fall over under sleeves of chiffon. Another includes those that are full puffed above the long, deep cuffs, these last consisting of new upon row of narrow black velvet.

Directoire coats are stunning, and the variations in them innumerable. One swagger model is of brown cloth with rather deep pointed revers, and collar of velvet embroidered with a design outlined with gold braid. A deep gauze cuff carried out in the same way is the sleeve finish. The skirt with this coat is perfectly plain. Still another style of Directoire coat shows a vest of white cloth embroidered in black full red and glistening threads of gold. Beautiful too are the long redingotes of the Directoire period in velvet. There is a new bottle green shade in an exquisite velvet coat of this description, which I examined the other day, which had revers of old rose, edged with milk.

With a Directoire coat one must be careful in the choice of a hat, and never buy in a gay, speculative mood, thinking "Oh, it will do!" Indeed, as regards millinery, one should never buy in the dark, as it were, but always

A pocket handkerchief is generally supposed to be simply for use and utility. The greater portion of the world, masculine and feminine, are content when they are able to secure one that costs a quarter of a dollar. A very fine handkerchief can be bought for a dollar.

For a small, delicate, fancy handkerchief such as pictured here, the extra amount of $50 was paid. At first only a bit of fabric, even if it is to be pressed against a charming ruffled mouth, or touched to the tip of an aristocratic nose.

This is an imported rose point lace handkerchief. It took weary, dreary weeks that bunched into months, for it to be wrought. It is eight inches square, half of that size being given over to the exquisite lace that composes it.

BLAMING PANAMA CANAL FOR BIG TREASURY DEFICIT

AND WITH THIS EXCUSE THE REPUBLICAN PLAN IS TO ISSUE BONDS FOR $50,000,000—CABINET OFFICERS SLASHING EXPENSE RIGHT AND LEFT FOR THE COMING YEAR.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 10.—A $50,000,000 bond issue is the plan which the government has determined on to meet the deficit, and solve the government's problem of short revenues. Congress is to be asked to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to borrow enough money to reimburse the government for what has been paid out on account of the Panama canal. The items to date are:

Paid to the Panama Canal Co. for the rights and effects of that corporation.	$40,000,000
Paid to the state of Panama, in accordance with the canal treaty, and for rights in the canal strip, etc.	10,000,000
Set aside and mostly expended for salaries and work in preparation to build the canal.	10,000,000
Total canal expense to date.	$60,000,000

The above extraordinary expenditures have been taken out of the government's ordinary revenues, and the result has been a shortage. At the end of last year it amounted in round numbers to $24,000,000. On the 1st of November of this year an additional deficit of $15,000,000 had accumulated.

this law authorizes bonds only for future expenditures. If congress would authorize the sale of $50,000,000 worth of bonds, as it is claimed that this will solve all questions of tariff revision or amendment of the internal revenue acts. It would dispose of the plan to tax the coffee cup, or add a tariff of small size to all imports now untaxed. The extra $20,000,000 which the books would then show on the credit side of the ledger would take care of the canal work for a couple of years to come; or, if it were decided to also issue canal bonds (as seems likely) to meet future work, it would insure the treasury against any deficit in the immediate future.

The leaders in congress are very cautious about proposing bond issues. It has always been laid up as political insurance against the Cleveland administration, and been bargained on by the republican politicians in season and out, that Cleveland sold bonds to meet current expenses of the government. To do that is a highly unpopular thing. To be responsible for the necessity for doing it, is political damnation.

The plans of the republican house leaders is believed by them to be in no danger of such criticism. $50,000,000 bond sale proposed would

Thus the government is behind its revenues $25,000,000 on a bond sale, it is figured, this $25,000,000 deficit would be wiped out and the government's books would show an excess of revenue over expenditures of about $20,000,000. Secretary of the Treasury Shaw is understood to favor the bond plan. He contends that there is no real deficit. The apparent deficit is caused by the payment of extraordinary expenses from the ordinary revenues. The Panama canal, for example, is a debt, he financed by itself. It is an undertaking of unusual magnitude, attended in the beginning by payments of unusual size, and it is unreasonable to look to the ordinary revenues of the government to defray these payments. This principle was recognized by congress when the canal was authorized, for in the act authorizing it the secretary was authorized to issue bonds to defray the cost of work. No bonds have yet been issued, and not be for current expenses; it would be for the extraordinary outlay involved in the commencement of the Panama Canal project. The estimates for next year's expenditures are being trimmed here and there. The Secretary of War has asked for less money from congress—that is, his estimates are less than the actual amount appropriated for the department last year. Postmaster General Cortelyou is working to wipe out the chronic deficit his department always shows. The government printing shop has trimmed its estimates a million dollars. At the present rate the deficit for the current fiscal year would be about 54 per cent as large as the deficit last year, or about $12,000,000. By slashing expenditures right and left, this deficit may easily be reduced to $2,000,000 or $4,000,000. A deficit so small would not be regarded as an evil, as the government has a working balance of about $150,000,000 before it reaches the gold reserve.

CONSTIPATION

"For over a year I suffered with chronic constipation and during that time I had to take so much medicine that I was almost driven to the wall. I could have an action on my bowels. Happily I found Cascarets. I took them for a few days and during the next year before I read Cascarets I took 100 pills. I am now free from all that trouble. I can see lots in behalf of suffering humanity."
